The ancient Greek civilization is known as the birthplace of western civilization. The development of the Greek civilization started around 2000 B.C. Greece had several wars, including the Trojan War around 1200 B.C., which threw them into what is known as the Dark Age. During that time, knowledge of writing was lost and most people lived in isolated villages. The Dark Age ended when the Greeks started to write again with an alphabet based on that of the Phoenicians. During that time, many city-states emerged and struggled with each other. In 480 B.C., the Greeks united to defeat the invading Persians, but the alliance didn't last long. Two city-states, Athens and Sparta, became the dominant powers in that region and constantly fought each other for power. Greece had its Golden Age in Athens around 477-431 B.C. In 334 B.C., Alexander the Great, leader of the country of Macedonia to the north, conquered the Greeks and started what is called the Hellenistic Age.

The ancient Greeks have made many influential contributions to western civilization. These contributions, included certain things in the areas of philosophy art, architecture, math and science. Greek philosophers like Socrates, Aristotle and Plato were great thinkers who were determined to seek truth to a certain subject or question no matter where it led them. Another area of Greek achievement was theater. Plays were important in ancient Greece.

When it was split into the eastern and western empires, Greece became part of the eastern, or the Byzantine Empire and Greek literature became the basis for learning in Byzantine institutions, especially in Constantinople, its capital. When Constantinople was destroyed in 1453 A.D., the Greek literature stored there and spread to the rest of Europe and helped start the Renaissance.
